

INFORMATION & INVITATION TO PARTNER

The ISN offers a substantial portfolio of visibility opportunities, but we are happy to discuss with potential partners about other visibility opportunity that might be of more interest.

ISN Frontiers Meeting is our new and exciting ISN meeting concept and offers a unique setting where we will bring together basic, translational & clinical researchers, medical and other scientists, clinicians and allied healthcare practitioners all of whom are interested in a specific scientific area. The meeting will provide excellent in-depth discussions and learning opportunities, created with the intention of fostering collaboration, and challenging colleague... an opportunity not to be missed.

This new event format will make available cutting-edge science to the global community while breaking down cross-regional barriers and providing access to the latest knowledge and expertise. The ISN Frontiers provide excellent opportunity for high-level scientific discussions, debate, interactive sessions and career discovery opportunities.

ISN Frontiers meetings are aimed at a global audience from established researchers and clinicians, as well as early career professionals who are in the process of developing a network and collaborations. Young researchers and clinicians will be provided with opportunities to present and discuss their work during the meeting as well as interact, learn, and network with more established professional in the field.

ISN Frontiers will provide an opportunity for high level publications to be generated from this meeting, in order to ensure dissemination of the results and summarize the unique outputs from such a meeting.

CPR - Cardio-Pulmonary-Renal interactions and their interdependence in disease

The 2019 meeting will be the second meeting in our new and exciting ISN meeting concept and it will a true cross-disciplinary event, bringing together clinicians, scientists and epidemiologists working in nephrology, cardiovascular and respiratory medicine.

Cardio-renal syndrome describes and classifies the various interrelationships between the heart and the kidneys; however, the link between diseases involving the heart, the lungs, and the kidneys requires investigation to unravel potentially novel and common pathophysiological mechanisms. Through an interactive and high-quality scientific program, the ISN Frontiers meeting will:

Present the latest cutting-edge science and innovation in kidney-heart-lung function and disease

Increase awareness and recognize the interactions among the kidneys, the heart, and the lungs that can impact the development of systemic disease and co-morbidities.

Cultivate and develop novel concepts in the pathogenesis of kidney disease and its related complications associated with chronic kidney disease and transplantation in a wider context

Provide a unique platform for active interactions among the three disciplines and foster cross-disciplinary research collaborations to further our understanding of the important connections between the kidneys, the heart, and lungs.

Stimulate new hypotheses for translational research and identify opportunities and targets for developing new therapies.

Promote collaborative clinical trials across the three clinical disciplines and encourage a more holistic view and approach to diseases affecting the three organs systems.

Through a better understanding of the underlying pathophysiological mechanisms linking the kidneys, heart, and lungs, ISN Frontiers Gothenburg 2019 hopes to shift the disease paradigm to identify new disease pathways, and potentially novel treatment targets for more effective therapies in renal disease, and its frequent cardiac and pulmonary co-morbidities.

Committee

The 2019 ISN Frontiers organizing and scientific program committee includes:

- Jenny Nyström, University of Gothenburg Sweden (Chair)
- Angela Wang, University of Hong Kong Queen Mary Hospital, Hong Kong (Co-Chair)
- Boye L. Jensen, University of Southern Denmark (Co-Chair)

Audience

We are aiming to attract 500 participants working within the Cardiac, Pulmonary and Kidney research communities who will, together, discuss, update, debate and learn about research within 'CPR Interactions'.

The program will be of special interest to cardiovascular, pulmonary and renal physiologists, pharmacologists, cell biologists and immunologists; cardiologists, critical care and respiratory physicians, and nephrologists; PhD students, post-doctoral and clinical research fellows.

ISN offers partners a format of meetings that allows for maximum interaction and networking with a highly-focused target audience to avoid having to compete for their attention with hundreds of other companies with possibly bigger budgets and different interests. ISN is committed to providing equal exposure and visibility to its partners by offering comprehensive packages that allow them maximum recognition and exclusive interaction with a highly-focused target audience. It also helps partners to actively participate in creating new insights, knowledge and applications.

We hope that the meeting will raise your interest and you will be interested in supporting it. The ISN offers a substantial portfolio of visibility opportunities, but we are happy to discuss with potential partners about other visibility opportunity that might be of more interest.
